Method #4 Freelancing Writing

Introduction

Thanks to new opportunities that have come up for freelance writers. From your home, you can earn or make some money by just exploring the avenue available as a wordsmith. If had an email asking the question that "How Did I Get started?" Luckily, I had a bit of background that I was a former technical writer who wanted to turn a freelance writer at home.

So I started it as part time to make few dollars.

I suggested an administrative assistant to start a freelancing writing setup such as brochures, articles and newsletters. I suggested her for a full time magazine writing to cover stories.

To "get some experience" the first step is essential to show some potential in your writing. You can put together your thoughts and experiences. Without having a website or a blog you can give this service. No matter what you are and who you are only who must have internet and good writing skills.

The path to become a freelance writer is to move ahead step by step.

Start Freelance Writing

So, how do you go? What you write, must be perfect and fit the subject as a freelance writer.

- Start Volunteering for writing projects with a local non-profit.
- Start writing flawless article on topics that interests you.
- Use a piece of your write up that you have written in the past employment.
- Start a blog.
- Start writing for blogs

In the Beginning freelance writers tend to start on the wrong foot. You must watch out for some tips before you go for your writing business.

1. How to Market your Services:

The #1 thing to become a freelance writer is to show your services and get your clients. Surprised? I mean to be a successful writer you must have services to offers and also make everyone ware of it then only you can your bills and have a good living. Everything cannot be just started in one go, it must be step by step. So don't go crazy and just start.

2. Taking Low Paying Work:

It the start of the work or your first assignment you will find very enticing to work for low rates but think are you doing this for sake of some money or you are not confident on your skills of writing. May be you need to think about it and think about your ability.

Don't price yourself low it's just working hard for peanuts and will hamper your confidence. Too low price will burn you out.

3. Booking Too Many Clients:

Always avoid to take too much work, and don't do too fast, it is a risk of you burning out. And this mostly happens of rock-bottom pricing. Freelancer writers taking too much work of their clients end up doing writing day and night, for which they struggle hard to keep up...

4. Missing Deadlines:

Your credibility is often damaged if you start pushing back the deadlines. Clients look for work from you taking you as an expert who is also professional with reputation but when you underestimate your clients projects it give a wrong impact of your working reputation. You must always convey your client that how long it will take for an assignment. Your clients also have their deadlines to meet! Put a good the impact of your work done on time. Don't make an impression of an Unreliable writer...

5. Losing Referral Business:

Current clients become the best source for your new business. You must always ask for more work from your current clients, it's a wonderful idea to spread your ability and the word of your work to their colleagues. After that you will definitely get better work paying you good, also without spending much time in selling yourself. Because you are being recommended by your clients who know your work and you are trusted for that...

6. Keeping Bad Clients:

Particularly in lean times it is tempting to keep some bad clients.

If they are the micromanaging types, or price-hagglers, bad clients will kill your motivation for keeping you work. Try to avoid this and fire these clients - your sanity will absolutely thank you. ...

7. Listening to Negative People:

If you are new to this freelancing field people around you will not understand and take you as capable as you think and won't understand your goals if you explain clearly. Most people are never been self-employed so this is something challenging for them or threatens them to do new. Don't give an ear to them!
